COWS' TEETH.

Ignorance Stalking Through the Land.

A couple of Third Ward citizens met on the sidewalk last Monday morning as they were starting for their place of business, and one of them, who resides on Van Buren street, asked the other, a Jackson street man, if cows had any front teeth on their upper jaw. The Jackson street man was a little astonished at the question, as there had been nothing said about cows, but replied promptly:

"Why, of course, they have; how could the bite off grass if the hadn't?"

The Van Buren street man said it was not a question of logic, but a question of fact; and if the Jackson street man did know whether cows had front teeth on the upper jaw or not, he ought to say so. "I did not ask you for your opinion, I asked if you knew.

The Jackson street man was a little nettled at this, and replied with some warmth. He said if he had a three-year old child who would ask such a question as that, he would be afraid the child was an idiot.

"You would!"

"I certainly should."

"Then," said the Van Buren street man, "as it is such a simple question, of course, you can tell me whether cows have front teeth on their upper jaws or whether they have not."

"Why, of course, they have."

"They have, eh?"

"Yes."

"I'll bet you $10 they haven't" said the Van Buren street citizen, pulling out a roll of bills, peeling off a couple of fives, and shaking them at his neighbor. "Put up or shut up."

"There is some infernal catch about this," said the other, suspiciously. "I might have known it, too, the minute you asked me such an infernally idiotic question."

"No catch about it," replied the other, "if cows have front teeth on their upper jaws the $10 are yours. If they have not the money is mine. Nothing could be better than that, could there?"

But still the Jackson street man hesitated. It was barely possible that cows did not have any front teeth on their on their upper jaws. He remembered, then, that cows in biting off grass, always threw their noses outward, while horses nipped it by jerking their noses inward. He was astonished at how near he come to being victimized, but did not like to come down. The two were near the meat market near the corner of Jackson and Michigan streets, and the Jackson man was sure that a butcher would know for certain whether or not cows had front teeth on their upper jaws; so he pushed open the door and said to the proprietor:

"Lineham, have cows front teeth on their upper jaws?"

Lineham was running a skewer through a roast of beef, but he stopped, looking up in astonishment, and said:

"What?"

"Have cows front teeth on their upper jaws?"

"Cows?"

"Yes."

"Got front teeth on their upper jaws?"

"Yes."

"Upon my word, I don't know."

"You don't know?"

No, you see, I buy my beef by quarters at the slaugther house, and don't get the heads. But I can find out for you when I go over."

"I wish you would."

So the Jackson street man closed the door and rejoined his neighbor, and the two walked along without saying a word. A milk wagon was coming up the street, and it was resolved to hail the driver and ask him the question, as it is popularly supposed that milkmen are more or less familiar with cows. The Van Buren citizen cleared his throat and yelled, "hello!" The milkman reined up and said:

"Go ahead with your tests. If you find any water or chalk in that milk I'll give you the whole of it."

The citizen told him to be calm, as they had no intention of testing his milk, but only wanted to know if cows had front teeth on their upper jaws.

The milkman looked at them about a minute and then whipped up his horse and drove off, mentioning some kind of a fool that they were. Up on Wisconsin street, they saw another man delivering milk, and overtaking him, they explained the dispute. He smiled pityingly upon their ignorance, and said:

"Of course, cows have front teeth on their upper jaws—a driveling idiot ought to know that much. A cow would be a handsome looking object without any front teeth in her upper jaw, wouldn't she?"

"I've concluded to take that bet of yours," said the Jackson street man to the other. "Come, now, down with your dust. Put up or shut up."

"Why didn't you do it when you had a chance? I never claimed to know whether a cow had front teeth on her upper jaw or not. I only thought I had read somewhere about it, and asked to see if you had any knowledge of it for certain. But, now that the thing is settled, there is nothing to bet on as I can see?"

"Oh, of course not," said the Jackson street man, sarcastically, "of course not."

Just then Mr. Clark, of the Newhall House, happened along, and as the milkman picked up his lines and drove off, the Van Buren street man asked Mr. Clark if he knew anything about cows. Mr. Clark said he did, having formerly been a farmer and cattle buyer.

"Well," said the Van Buren streeter, "do you know I got the queerest idea into my head this morning about cows that a man ever had. Somehow or other I got the idea that cows have no front teeth on their upper jaws; and I actually offered to bet $10 with this man that such was the case. I don't see what possessed me."

"Well, if you had bet, you would have won the money," said Mr. Clark.

"What!" exclaimed both the citizens together.

"I say if you had bet, you would have won the money, for cows have no front teeth on their upper jaws."

"Sweet spirit, hear my prayer," said the Van Buren street citizen, as he brought out his roll and peeled the two fives again, and shook them at the Jackson street man, who turned away with a sickly smile and said he could not always be pulling out his money.

Ignorance seems to be stalking through the land like a Kansas grasshopper on stilts.—Peck's Milwaukee Sun.

LONGEVITY.—Some time ago the French Government sent a circular letter to all the districts of that country to collect information as to the conditions of life which seemed to most conduce to longevity. The replies were interesting, but on the whole monotonous; and the general result was that logevity is promoted by great lactivity sobriety, regular habits, regular labor, especially out doors, short of excessive fatigue; easy hours, a well-off condition, a phiosophical mind in meeting troubles, not too much intellect, and a domestic life.—The value of marriage was universally admitted, and long-lived parents were, also, found an important factor. A good climate and good water were mentioned. All this agrees with common sense, unless the idea that the intellect is a hindrance to longevity be considered unreasonable, and we know that some of the most intellectual men have lived to great age.

SODA FOR BURNS.—All kinds of Burns, including scalds and sunburns, are almost immediately relieved by the application of a solution of soda to the burnt surface. It must be remembered that dried soda will not do unless it is surrounded with a cloth moist enough to dissolve it. This method of sprinkling it on and covering it with a wet cloth is often the very best. But it is sufficient to wash the wound repeatedly with a strong solution. It would be well to keep a bottle of it always on hand, for an emergency, made so strong that more or less settles on the bottom. This is a saturated solution, and really such a solution as this is formed when the dry soda is sprinkled on and moistened with a cloth. It is thought by some that the pain of a burn is caused by the hardening of the albumen of the flesh which presses on the nerves, and the soda dissolves the albumen and relieves the pressure. Others think that the burn generates an acrid acid, and that the soda neutralizes it.

Cast iron can be soldered and it will be stronger than before broken. Place the broken pieces on a grandstone and make them clean and bright for an inch on both sides of the crack; tin the surface so that the solder will take hold of the iron. Muriatic acid is applied with a swab to the bright iron and then the best of solder laid on and rapidly rubbed over the surface, with the soldering iron as hot as possible without burning the tin off the copper soldering iron. File an eighth of an inch of solder over the crack.

"Now we are nicely settled!" exclaimed the happy new little wife; "if we only had a cow, Harry, we could have a nice soft bed." "Cow?" asked the poor husband—"goose you mean—geese yield feathers, you know, Mollie—geese, not cows."—"Yes," said Mollie, with a twinkle, "but cows give down, don't they, you stupid?" He uttered a snort of defiance and went out to chop some wood.

PASTE FOR PAPER.—To ten parts of gum arabic, by weight, add three parts of sugar in order to prevent the gum from cracking; then add water until the proper consistency is obtained. If a strong paste is required, add a quantity of flour equal in weight to the gum, without boiling the mixture. It improves in strength when it ferment.

"Is your wife a Democrat or a Republican?" asked one Rockland citizen of another in a store one morning. "She's neither," was the prompt response, and then glancing cautiously around and sinking his voice to a hoarse whisper he explained, "she's a Home-Ruler."—Rockland Courier.

A gentleman was lately complaining on 'change that he had invested a rather large sum of money in Wall street, and lost it all. A sympathizing friend asked him whether he had been a bull or a bear. To which he replied, "Neither, I was a jackass!"—Chicago Tribune.

An advocate of popular education began a speech once with these impressive words: "Mr. President, I rise to get up, and am not backward to come forward in the cause of education; for had it not been for education I should be as ignorant as you are, Mr. President."

Bad Effects of Living Abroad.

Americans are having their attention called, as never before, not only to the bad results of sending their children abroad to be educated, but of living abroad themselves. Lippincott's Magazine has an article on this subject, of which the following is an extract:

When one sees the people who come back from Europe after an absence of a year or two unable to speak their own language fluently, because they have heard and spoken nothing but German or French or Italian during that time, and who cannot stand the climate because they are not used to it; when one sees young ladies who return home unable to take any interest in American life, and who shut themselves away from its society, which to them is most unpolished and vapid, because they have had a European education; when one sees the hundred follies which a glimpse of Europe will put into the heads of people whom before one had every reason to think sensible enough—one feels inclined to ask one's self the question, Are we to conclude that European life is demoralizing to Americans? Are we to conclude that the innumerable advantages that such a life confers—the wider view and broader knowledge of things, the softening influence gained by contact with a riper civilization, the æsthetic tastes developed by acquaintance with older and more perfect art—are to count as nothing, are to be outweighed by the disadvantages of the same life?

Certainly, out of a hundred Americans who go abroad, ninety-nine return with what they have lost in narrowness of experience completely offset by what they have gained in pretentious affectation. So far from being improved in any way are they that their well-wishers are inclined to think it would have been far better had they never gone at all.

But why cannot Americans indulge this preference for life in Europe, why can they not avail themselves of the choice if it is open to them, and yet remember that they ARE Americans, and that no circumstance can absolve them from a sacred obligation to show respect for their native country, and to stand as its citizens on their own dignity? Men and women may be conscious of faults and weaknesses in their parents, but they are not expected to expose these weaknesses on that account; instinctive delicacy in any one but a churl would keep him from acknowledging any such failings to his own heart. And a similar feeling should teach us, even if our sympathies were not with our own country, to treat it in word and deed with respect.—Unless we do learn to show this respect before Europeans, we must still resign ourselves to the imputation, if they wish to make it, of crudeness, of being still sadly in want of refining.

For many years old John K., of Houston, Texas, has been known as a miser.—He died of starvation a few days ago, refusing food up to the last moment. He left at least $50,000 in real estate and money, owning much property in Houston. He was a hater of mankind, and hated women so much that he would not even rent his house to one of them. When he was dying the room was so dark that the doctor, who had come voluntarily to attend the man, ordered another candle lighted; but old K. raised his head and with his dying breath expostulated and forbade the extravagance.

The White House was so named after it was burned by the British in 1814, when the smoke so blackened the freestone walls that it was painted white. It has been the home of all the successive Presidents except Washington, and around it cluster many pleasant domestic associations, unmixed with any of the romantic intrigues or dark shadows of shame which cloud the histories of the residences of European rulers.

In Spain a village priest preaching on the miracle of the loaves and fishes made a mistake, saying that five thousand loaves and fishes sufficed for five persons. "And did they not suffer from indigestion?" asked a wag of the priest after the sermon was over. "No," replied the latter, not to be outwitted; "therein consisted the miracle!"

"See here," said a fault-finding husband to his wife, "we must have things arranged in this house so that we shall know just where everything is kept." "With all my heart," she sweetly answered, "and let us begin with your late hours, my love; I should dearly like to know where they are kept." He lets things run on as usual.

"Pour in knowledge gently," Plato, one of the wisest men of ancient Greece, observed that the minds of children are like bottles with very narrow mouths. If you attempt to fill them too rapidly much knowledge is wasted and little received, whereas with a small stream they are easily filled.

The Kennebec (Me.) Journal says: "A young city fellow bought a farm last Winter. He had a fine orchard of two hundred apple trees, and a few weeks ago he tapped every one of them for cider."

An Ohio paper speaks of a man being bruised by the emphatic gesture of a mule.

GUAYMAS LETTER.

GUAYMAS, MEXICO, January 5, 1881.

This quaint old town in Sonora, Mexico, is located on the east shore of the Gulf of California and has a harbor, landlocked and sheltered from the Sea with approaches through channels between the Islands of Pajoras, San Vicente, Pitayas and Cohori. The odd and distinctive features of this strange old town, are so peculiar that I have been tempted to give your readers some idea of its location, its future possibilities, and something of the ante-deluvian habits of this city of 600 souls.

I came down from 'Frisco in a very comfortable coastwise steamer which touches here about once a month, carrying a few passengers and a light cargo of goods. We anchored one bright morning in the harbor, and while we were preparing to go ashore I took in the wild and romantic surroundings of this port, so soon to become a great commercial entrepot in the American Australian trade.

Lazy Yaqui Indians were plying their vocation on every hand catching fish of many varieties or taking shrimps, crabs, lobsters and oysters that are found in great abundance.

THE TOWN OF GUAYMAS

nestles at the end of its quiet and secure harbor, surrounded on three sides by high bluffy mountains. The opening into the ocean between two high, rugged cliffs, is about five miles from the city, and within this strait the bay widens so as to furnish what has been well termed the most secure harbor on the Pacific. About half a mile from the town an island divides the inner from the outer harbor, and it is on this island that the Southwestern terminus of the great Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe is located. Here are the immense wharves and unlimited dockage, where the heaviest men-of-war can anchor in safety. Beyond the island, landward, the water is much shallower, the average depth being about nine feet, while the seaward side there is a depth averaging thirty feet. The railroad reaches its terminus by a long bridge from the Eastern shore, and will be able to

TRANSPORT FREIGHT TO THE STEAMER DIRECT.

After some little delay at the custom-house we walked over to the "American hotel," and I am free to say that it is the oddest looking building in the world enjoying that universal name; a low, square, adobe building, surrounding a court or placita. Its mud floors and small windows, and low ceilings, are striking novelties. After a lunch my friend and I sauntered through the town, which carries the Mexican stamp upon its face. The buildings are all of adobe, built one story high, and better as a class than those in New Mexico. In fact, some of them were highly ornamental. As we neared the public square, or plaza, we found a gay scene awaiting us. The native band from the garrison were playing a medley of Spanish airs, and the plaza was filled with ladies, young and old, in gay costumes, who promenaded without escorts, their natural protectors standing outside the circle and bowing here and there as they recognized acquaintances. It was a very pretty sight to an American unused to such scenes. I found, upon becoming better acquainted that are divided into three classes, the "Upper Ten" being the Spanish merchants whom I found refined and educated and with an elegant gentility about them, too often lacking among our own aristocracy.

The middle class are the native Mexican and the lower, the Yaqui Indians, who have been largely employed in grading the road between Hermosilla and Guaymas. I was astonished to find what we term slavery (here called peonage) is in full vogue. If a man becomes in debt to another for $10 he is placed in absolute servitude until it is paid, and as wages vary from 10 to 35 cents a day, a man who once gets behind $10 is hopelessly involved.

Perhaps the most noticable characteristic of Guaymas is the evident aversion and hostility to anything which savors of progression. In transporting cargoes from the wharf to the custom house and thence to the business houses, no drays or wagons are allowed to be used, because it takes away the labor of the men who "pack" everything on their backs, and in carrying water from the large well which supplies the town the same law is in vogue, and a movement to bring the water into the town by pipes was instantly squelched by the authorities. I made considerable inquiry about these mountains surrounding the town, but nothing seems to have been developed in them as far as is concerned. Back further, however, from the coast, there are many mines being worked, which are paying splendidly, and many more deserted ones where shafts were put down from 300 to 500 feet by the Spaniards years ago, but which now contains more or less water. In those early days these miners were destitute of pumps and proper appliances necessary to free the shafts from water and many excellent mines were destroyed by flooding. These abandoned mines have all reverted to the government and can be bought for a nominal sum. I see here a rich field for some enterprising companies, for with our modern hydraulic pumps these mines could be emptied at a comparatively small expense.

When the A. T. & S. F. shall have completed its line down through this rich mineral country, I prophesy an emigration of miners and business men such as has never been known in the West, for these certainly are rich and promising fields for the lusty prospector. The climate in Winter is, to express it in a single word, perfect, though in the town during the Summer months the thermometer ranges pretty high, owing to the mountains keeping out the sea-breeze. Living is comparatively cheap and comfortable, and from all accounts everybody is as healthy here as anywhere. F. S. P.

THE GREAT QUESTION.—The absorbing question of the week has been this: Have cows front teeth in their upper jaws? It is a question that cannot be answered by one person among a thousand. Stock men butchers, and scores of farmers and others, have been asked the question, and while some ventured an answer, none were willing to back their opinion with a bet. The answer will be found on our first page in the article under the caption of "Cows' Teeth."

The Lyon County, Nev., Times of the 5th, says: "Along the Carson and Colorado Railroad there are about a dozen washouts. There has been no communication by rail with the Mound House since January 29th. A force of 150 men has been at work repairing the road, and will probably require three or four more days to complete it. The damage to the Railroad is estimated at $20,000.

"TRUTHFUL JEEMS."

LETTER FROM BODIE.

[Pittsfield, Mass., Journal, Jan. 27th.]

EDITOR OF JOURNAL:—It was with great pleasure that I received a copy of the Journal. It has been a question in my mind for many years since I was a clerk in Morey, Todd & Co.'s grocery store,—if Pittsfield would ever rise high enough to have a daily paper. I congratulate you. You have a very interesting paper, and the citizens of Berkshire should rally around and appreciate your endeavors.

I do not wish to paralyze your readers with all the horrors of life in a mining camp of California, but if you consider it worthy of publication I will give you a short sketch of my experience in the mountains the past two years, since I left the pleasant village 'have you got that city charter yet?) I suppose many of your readers are familiar with all the ups and downs that fall to the lot of man in crossing the continent. But we will consider that we have passed all the beautiful scenery that is to be seen on the Union and Central Pacific Railroad, and that the conductor has cried out Reno, where you change change cars for the noted gold and silver mining districts of Virginia, Nev., Bodie, Mammoth, White Pine, Bloody Canyon, Dead Man's Gulch, Cal., and numerous other miners' camps that are not worthy of note. Immediately, on leaving the cars at Reno for Bodie, you take the cars for Carson, Nev., a distance of thirty miles. On arriving at Carson you reach the end of civilization. You then take a stage for almost any point you wish to go to in California. When I walked into the stage office, about two years ago, I immediately made inquiries about the Bodie stage. I was informed that I would have to lay over one day as the stage was full. You can imagine my feelings. I had arrived in Carson with just eleven nickels in my pocket. I went to the telegraph office to see if there was not some way in which I could communicate with my brother, who was editor of the Evening Standard. After an hour spent in conversation between the two operators I was informed that H. Z. Osborne, my brother, was from Bodie about one hundred miles, reporting a mine. Here was a fix! Three thousand miles from home, with eleven five cent pieces in my pocket! I went back to the stage office, and on giving my name was informed that a seat had been reserved for the past four days, but it had gone out.

I made up my mind that I was elected to stay until the next morning, and I would make the best of it. I strolled down the street, (only one street in the place of importance) and finally thought I would squander one of my nickles for a glass of beer. I waltzed into a saloon, called for a glass of beer, drank the beverage, and placed one of my nickles on the counter. The gentleman behind the counter politely informed me that it was "not good." I picked it up, looked at it, and produced another. Again was I informed that it was "no good." I was thunder struck. I could swear that they were not pewter. Finally the gentleman behind the bar remarked: "I guess you are a tenderfoot."

"Sir?" says I.

"You have just arrived from the East, have you not?"

I replied that I had.

"Well, nothing goes in this country less than a short bit."

"What in h—— is a short bit?"

"A ten cent piece, my friend, is a short bit."

I was lost; such a thing I did not own. Finally, I told him my troubles, and the result was, I found a friend and all the beer I could drink.

I had a pleasant time in Carson that night, and the next morning at 10 o'clock was at the stage office, ready to renew my journey of 119 miles to Bodie.

While waiting for the agents to load on the baggage, I noticed two men mount the driver's seat, with shot guns. I timidly asked my new found friend (the bar tender) what those men carried guns for.

"Oh," he replied, "they are shot-gun messengers, you are liable to be attacked three or four times before you reach Bodie by stage robbers." The hair stood up on my head, at this quiet and easy explanation of affairs.

"How do they transact their business do they molest the passengers?" I inquired.

"Well, it is according to how they feel; sometimes they will rob a stage, and if they come across a passenger that they have trouble with, and then he has nothing to rob, they take and tie him to a rock or tree, and take a few shots at him." Great Peters! How I longed to be on Main, Fenn, Pike, or any other street in Pittsfield about that time. Finally everything was ready, and the driver with his list of passengers in his hand commenced to seat them. "L. Osborne," he cried. "Here," I responded. "You will have to ride on top." I began to think I was in for it, and climbed up back of the two men with their guns. I made up my mind that if any robbers attacked the stage, that they would have to shoot the messengers before they got at me. But I am pleased to say that on that eventful day and night's ride from Carson to Bodie, we were not molested, and at 6 o'clock the next morning we arrived in Bodie.

MR. JOURNAL, was you ever homesick? I was about the time I cast my eyes about me. Not a tree, plant, or anything in the shape of vegetation in sight. Nothing but sand and gold and silver quartz. (I did not know what the latter was at that time.) I looked around for my brother, but did not see him among the crowd that is always present on such occasions. The first thing after alighting from the stage I noticed, was that every man had a belt around him, and attached to that belt was a fierce-looking knife and a six-shooter. I did not dare speak to a soul. I stepped to one side and finally heard this pleasant remark;—"Pipe off the tenderfoot; mind the hat he wears, (it was a small Derby hat); let's take a shot at it." I just cut across the street, caring not where I went only to get out of the way. Feeling quite hungry at the time, and not knowing where to find my brother, I strolled down the street to find a restaurant. My search was soon rewarded, and I went inside, got upon one of the high stools in front of the counter and gave my order. I would like to give you a lengthy description of this barroom, restaurant, and gambling saloon combined, but I am already taking up too much of your valuable space.

I had just got to enjoying my breakfast, when bang, bang! came the report of guns from the gambling saloon. Out rushed the crowd, and out came the guns; I dropped knife and fork, lost my hat, and made a rush for the door. I succeeded in making the street in safety, when, oh, joy! there stood my brother, smiling; I almost flew into his arms.

Says I, "Let's go to your house!"

"Oh, wait a moment and see the fun!" You must get used to this, for you have got to commence as local editor of my paper as soon as you get rested."

Seeing that I was considerably worked up, we did not wait for the final result of the shooting (there were only four killed at that time). I did not leave my brother's house for several days, and when I appeared on the streets of Bodie again, as the local editor, of the Standard, (which has since been sold to the Free Press) I was fully equipped, and resembled a full-fledged highwayman.

But I will close for this time. In a week or so I will give you a description of several of the leading features of Bodie, such as court trials, funerals, balls, theaters, etc.

LESTER OSBORNE.

We republish the above effusion from a well known citizen of Bodie to the Pittsfield, Mass., Journal as a sample of the bosh and falsehoods sent out to the world as truths about our sister town, and which has given Bodie such a bad name. A greater number of untruths were never massed together within so small a space. Such a letter is an imposition on the publisher of the Journal, an insult to its readers, and a gross libel on the people of Bodie. It will puzzle a Bodieite to discover a single truth in the whole letter, excepting that the youth did come from Carson on the stage. If the young man's Carson experience was as written, that Carson barkeeper is a good gager, and he should have a berth in Uncle Sam's revenue department, for if he can guage a barrel of whisky as quickly as he guaged the Journal's correspondent, his services would be invaluable. One is almost inclined to wish that "every man" with a "belt and a fierce-looking knife and a six-shooter" had "piped off the tenderfoot" about an inch below the band of that "small Derby," were it not for the fact that it would have prevented that "joyful meeting" with that "smiling" brother, who was awaiting a startling item consequent on the "tenderfoot" having "four men" for breakfast—his first meal in Bodie. We were not before aware that the "local editor" of the Standard was a walking arsenal. We await the coming of another Journal with another epistle from Bodie's "tenderfoot."

HOUSE AND FARM.

Farmer's Accounts.

There is probably no class of men who live more strictly according to their means, and who more uniformly make both ends meet at the close of the year, than farmers. But there are comparatively few who are as strict in keeping their accounts as those who are engaged in mercantile or mechanical business. And yet there is no reason why they should not be as systematical in recording their incomes and their outgoes as any others. As one of the least weighty considerations, it would afford an interesting occupation for occasional leisure moments and an interesting matter of review at the close of a season or of the year.—But in an economical point of view the advantage would be much greater. If every one who has a farm or a garden were to put down not only the amount of his expenses from day to day, but separately, what he expends upon a particular crop, or upon a particular field or tract of land, be it large or small, and on the opposite side of the balance sheet the returns in produce and in money of what he raises; and if this were done in connection with every crop and each one of his fields separately, it would enable him at a glance to determine on what portions of his place, or on what particular crops, he could lay out his money and his labor to the greatest pecuniary advantage.

One of the chief hindrances to success in any branch of business is a want of system, and keeping an accurate account of expenditures and receipts would at once be followed by systematic results. The present season of the year is a good time for each one to lay his plans in this respect, to prepare his books, and so to be prepared for a more systematic prosecution of the work of the year. Those who have adopted the plan of keeping the most minute record of all their operations, have found it to be not only a source of great satisfaction, but of great profit, and we recommend the plan to all, whether their business is on a large or a small scale.—Ex.

HINTS ABOUT WINTER WORK.—On most farms more time could be profitably spent in doing chores, and taking care of stock during Winter. If yards and sheds can be divided up, and stock of different ages and conditions be grazed somewhat according to size, strength and requirements, it might require a little more time to attedd to them, but would be vastly better for the animals, and consequently for their owner. If a farmer does his own chores, and is compelled to continue the practice, time must often be economized, but if he is paying some one for time spent, he may well study to make more work instead of less. Where wood is used for fuel, or timber is to be cut, prepared and transported for fencing or building purposes, the opportunities of Winter should not be neglected. Harnesses may also be cleaned and oiled, tools and wagons repaired and painted, and numberless other jobs done that are so often left for the rainy days that seldom come at the right time. Though Winter may not be the best time for trimming fruit trees, half the orchards in the country had better be trimmed then, than left in their present neglected condition. There are often times and places where a gravel bank can be opened in quite cold weather, and material drawn to improve farm roads and public highways.
